To prevent the spread of communicable diseases, it is extremely important for all cooks and other kitchen staff in hotels and eateries to undergo a medical check-up and obtain a health card.

This allows for early identification of silent health abnormalities in a seemingly healthy adult, enabling one's doctor to institute timely early treatment interventions with better health outcomes.

Our Food Handlers Screening is recommended for all household cooks, private chefs and restaurant chefs. It assesses overall wellbeing, hepatitis infections, HIV and any other infections.

Most customers are not aware whether the kitchen staff, who prepare food, are healthy or suffering from any disease, in this light a compulsory medical examination for kitchen staff will help curb the spread of diseases from hotels.

Employers should arrange for the medical check-up of their kitchen staff and ensure that they obtain a clean bill of health.
